The personal site of American attorney Bart Fisher is one of the most sophisticated in the legal community – among the most reputable Washington attorneys in the United States. The title of the site is “Our People” – an allusion to Abraham Lincoln’s Gettysburg address – and an indirect way of saying: “I’m right alongside the men serving in the Congress, the Departments of State and Justice, and the White House.” This expensive, wily attorney, respected in all venues of the capital, has been hired by Postalis to prosecute its just claim against Mellon Bank.

Poor Mellon standing in the path of Bart Fisher -- this distinguished bank, founded at the end of the 17th century, confronting the Postal employees’ pension fund and being overwhelmed, trying to prove that it has nothing to do with investments made by its operators at its Brazilian affiliate that racked up billions in losses.

The U.S. legal system does not wave the American flag when the case is about protecting a bank that has misbehaved in Brazil. The indemnity demanded by Postalis to cover the losses caused by Mellon Bank will be enough to pay Bart Fisher's fees and then some, as well as compensate the disruption caused to the lives of thousands of participants in the most corrupt pension fund in Brazil's recent history.

What's more, Bart Fisher, Esq., might consider tweaking his website – who knows, perhaps he could change the title to: "Our Victory."
